In March 2016, the Center for Profitable Agriculture reviewed a list of livestock slaughtering and processing plants in Tennessee that were permitted for inspection by the U.S. Department of Agriculture Food Safety and Inspection Service (USDA FSIS). Most of the plants operate for the sole purpose of handling animals, meat and processing for their own company such as Tyson, Koch Foods, Pilgrim’s Pride, Hillshire Farm, Swaggerty Sausage and Wampler’s Farm Sausage.

Thirteen of the plants were “possibilities” for farmers who want to have livestock slaughtered and processed under USDA inspection in order to market their meat products. In April 2018, this list was updated to add two new plants to the list and delete one plant that closed. The 14 plants considered possibilities for farmers to use for processing livestock for retail meat sales as of April 2018 are listed below and identified with a corresponding number on the map.
